"I want to say a heartfelt "Thank You" to the beautiful ladies at Eastside church of Christ for the wonderful meal provided to the family and loved ones of Danny Joe Smith, following his funeral service. Your kind and gracious gesture was so appreciated, and the food superb. It's no secret the best tasting meal to be had is in a church fellowship hall. ☺

Thank you, to everyone involved, for truly being an extension of the heart and hands of God."

Your sister in Christ,
Annie Vondohlen

*Welcome to Worship!
We're so glad you're here!*

“Let’s Break Out the Booze and Have a Ball”

Before you say to yourself, “Wow, that title sounds like this is the church for me!” - allow me to explain. That’s a lyric from a 1969 song recorded by Peggy Lee entitled “Is That All There Is?” In the song, she gradually progresses through major experiences of life that usually offer occasions for deep reflection, wonder or satisfaction. She sings about watching her childhood home burn down as a child, seeing the circus as a young girl, and falling “so very much in love” with the “most wonderful boy in the world.” And after each experience, she’s left saying to herself, “Is that all there is?” The things that were supposed to evoke deep feeling, delight, or satisfaction simply don’t. And, as far as she’s concerned, if that’s all there is, then “let’s keep dancing...break out the booze and have a ball.”

We can’t help but search for a deep satisfaction of the soul, something that lets us say to ourselves, “Ah, I’ve finally found it. Now, I can rest. Now, my heart is full and the dull, achy restlessness of my spirit is gone.” More often than not, however, we discover that what we think has satisfied us hasn’t. We grow numb, jaded, cynical, or worse. The woman in Peggy Lee’s song eventually realizes that people listening to her might wonder why she just doesn’t commit suicide, but she replies that death would probably be a disappointment, too. So, “let’s break out the booze and have a ball.” Can we do better than this? Is there a better satisfaction for the human spirit, maybe even a satisfaction that we’re made for? At Eastside, we think there is. That’s what we’re talking about today. Thanks for being here!

Matt Carver
